

DUKE UNIVERSITY

THE HOLOCAUST AND THE ISRAELIS:
THE ROLE OF MEMORY IN THE ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN CONFLICT

A THESIS FOR HONORS

SUBMITTED TO THE POLITICAL SCIENCE DEPARTMENT

BY REBECCA WEKSBERG

DURHAM, NC

MARCH 31, 2003

*For my grandmother –
Whose unimaginable strength and selfless love are examples not only to me, but to all mankind. In my life, I will always try to follow your lead.
I will remember your fight, and teach it to my children, and I will honor you with not only every battle for justice, but also with every kind act.*

CONTENTS

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.....	iv
INTRODUCTION.....	1
CHAPTER ONE: The Debate Over Holocaust Memory.....	20
CHAPTER TWO: The History of Holocaust Memory in Israel.....	54
CHAPTER THREE: The Holocaust Memory Today.....	78
CHAPTER FOUR: Conclusions.....	124
BIBLIOGRAPHY.....	147

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to thank Professor Ruth Grant, whose insightful comments helped me to see the “big picture” and whose support gave me encouragement even when I felt I was floundering. This thesis would not have been such a rewarding one had it not been for her help.

I would also like to thank Professor Peter Feaver, our program advisor. Not only were his comments on draft material helpful, the structure he brought to a task that easily could have gotten out of hand helped me impose order on myself and kept me motivated to continue.

No acknowledgements section would be finished without mentioning my friends and family, without whom not only would these acknowledgements be incomplete, but my life as well. Thanks to my roommates, Diana and Sara, who provided me with a quiet working environment, but also many much-needed distractions. Special thanks to my family – Mom, Dad, David and Ben – and my boyfriend, Dave, not simply for help with this thesis, but for the love, laughter and support you always give me. This small space could never express how lucky I am to have all of you, but know that it is something I feel deeply and daily and will never forget.

This thesis is dedicated to my grandmother, and through her, to all of my family that suffered in the Nazi camps, including those I never knew. Writing about the memory of the Holocaust was especially important to me precisely because I myself feel the burden of its memory, and search for the proper way to honor it. Though that search may never be complete, this thesis was an important beginning.